  Keynote Speaker: Bert Butler "Tito" Beveridge II

BERT “TITO” BEVERIDGE, founder and master distiller of Tito’s Handmade Vodka, is a true pioneer in the world of microdistilling – in fact, it’s a world he helped create. In the early 1990s, Tito enjoyed infusing flavored vodka in his spare time, creating much-loved (and much-requested) batches for friends. Tito watched as microbreweries and boutique wineries began cropping up throughout the country, and astutely predicted that the next step would be to incorporate the same handcrafted principles to the spirits industry.

In 1997, Tito fought to create the permit process in Texas to establish his legal right to open the state’s first distillery. It took the company more than eight years to turn a profit. Today, Tito’s Handmade Vodka is one of the fastest-selling and fastest-growing microdistilleries on the market and remains one of the purest spirits available.

Tito lives in Austin, Texas with his wife and three children.

  Includes Facilitated Workgroups
  - Moderator: KC Branch

  Legislators are doing patchwork change- often because of special interest wanting to tweak laws to benefit themselves. The regulators (agencies) know where the issues are within the industry and the struggles of regulating and operating a successful agency. However, agencies are prohibited from lobbying the legislature. Is there a way (or better way) to educate and inform Legislators so they can make impacting change? What is the line between informing and lobbying? Agencies are requested to meet with Legislators, but cannot lobby. What is the difference?
